

P.S. I am stopping at Miller's in the city. You are all with me, every other day. I am I say for home; I say I am. I am I say a very pleasant time.

Adrian, Nov. 13, 1865.

Dear Wife:

I arrived here yesterday afternoon from Detroit, and received warm greetings at the depot from my old friends Dr. Owen, Thomas Chandler, Jacob Walton, Edwin Comstock, Samuel Hayball, and others. Last evening we had the best and largest audience I have addressed since I left home, all the seats in the spacious and beautiful church of Rev. Mr. Powell being filled, and the aisles ~~also~~ occupied with chairs and settees. I spoke for two hours, feeling in the right mood, and held the unbroken attention of all present to the close. My Cleveland audience was a large one, but not equal to the one ^{last} night; and I had the intellectual and moral elements of the city and its surroundings present.

I am stopping with Dr. Owen, who has built him a handsome residence since I was here, in a charming locality. His wife is one of the brightest and pleasantest of women. I had hoped to see her venerable mother - a very remarkable woman, in her way, with whom I was delighted when I was here twelve years ago - but she is a hundred miles away with one of her children, lying hopelessly ill, and Mrs. Owen leaves to-morrow to see the closing scene.

Great was my joy to receive, at the hands of Rev. Mr. Powell, a letter from you, and another from William, in the same envelope. Yours was dated the 7th, and his the 8th inst.

All the little details of home matters you send me are just what I want to get. I feel so happy to be assured of your own health, and that every thing goes along smoothly with you. As for dear Ellie, she has my warmest sympathies for her suffering condition, with her terrible neuralgic attacks, and trust her contemplated visit to Philadelphia will be such a change of atmosphere as to relieve her entirely. I hope she will be able so to arrange her visit as to be there at Wendell's and Lucy's marriage, as her presence on that occasion would be peculiarly gratifying to them.

My visit to Detroit did not net me a penny. I lectured on Friday and Saturday evenings to three hundred persons — one hundred and fifty each evening, out of a population of sixty thousand people. But, fortunately, they were

My visit to Detroit did not net me a penny. I lectured on Friday and Saturday evenings to three hundred persons - one hundred and fifty each evening, out of a population of sixty thousand people. But, fortunately, they were highly respectable, intelligent, and influential, and much gratified with my lectures. On Sunday evening, a considerable company met me at the Russell House, to talk about the Freedmen's cause, and the interview will, no doubt, help to give a fresh impetus to that cause. I dined, that day, with Mr. Delany, a young married man, a nephew of Cyrus McNeally and wife, of Ohio, old anti-slavery friends; and in the evening took tea with the estimable widow of the late William Buffum, of Rhode Island, (brother of Arnold,) and their daughter. On Saturday, I called on the leading Orthodox clergyman, Rev. Dr. Duffield, and had a pleasant interview, chiefly with reference to the Freedmen's Aid Commission, of which he is a member. The next day I received a letter of introduction to him, through the mail, from Mr. McKim at New York.

On Sunday afternoon, I addressed the colored Sabbath School in the Baptist church, of which Rev. Mr. Chase, an excellent white man, is the pastor. One of the scholars was ninety years of age. At the close of the meeting, she came forward, and gave me her benediction.

I received $25 for my two lectures at Detroit - paid $14 at the hotel, $5.50 to get from Cleveland to Detroit; and the same to get me back to that place would, as you see, leave me nothing. The hotel bills average $5 a day, (with fire,) to say nothing of the expense of railway travelling. But I blame no one at Detroit, in view of all the circumstances. Artemus Ward lectured to an immense audience the same evening - Charles Keane and his wife acted before another - &c. Then, Friday evening ^{is} was the evening universally reserved for religious weekly meetings; and Saturday evening is no time to get the people together.

Mrs. Stebbins came with me from Detroit to visit the Owens.

I leave this afternoon for Hillsdale, to lecture there this evening. I feel better than I did at Detroit, but necessarily somewhat ~~down~~ worn. My voice holds out remarkably, in spite of my incessant talking; yet I fear it will utterly give out. The weather for a week has been superb - glorious - the true Indian summer.

Forewell, dearest! W. L. G.
